I Introduction

- 1 Thank you, Mr. Chair, for inviting us to appear.
- 2 My name is Monica Auer and I am the Executive Director of the Forum, a small nonprofit and non-partisan organization that undertakes research and policy analysis about electronic media. We support a strong communications system that serves the public interest.
- I am joined by Al MacKay, a Director of the Forum's Board who has been involved in various aspects of the broadcast industry for over 40 years,
- We will address three issues about local broadcast news: why does it matter, what is known about it, and what could be done about it? We will be referring to the tables we have given the Clerk.

II Why does local broadcast news still matter?

- 5 As your Committee has already heard, local news is under pressure.
- But strong local media serve many purposes. They foster citizen engagement, and they enable our democracy to exist. A vibrant local station is at the heart of the community that relies on it for information about everything from school closures to local elections.
- 7 Local media matter because every community is unique, with a different perspective on the issues that matter in and outside its borders.
- A friend who helped cover the last federal election made this clear. He talked about the extensive demographic changes he was seeing in many ridings, and the significant differences between the issues discussed by the national media, and those discussed on doorsteps. While the national media were discussing the economy or the niqāb, for example, local media in several ridings were hearing that the most important issue was family reunification.
- 9 But local media are in trouble. Due to time, we will focus on local radio and TV stations.
- Just what do we know about broadcast ownership and local news?

III What do we know about local broadcast news in Canada?

- 11 The primary source of broadcast data in Canada is the CRTC.
- Reviewing its decisions shows that since 2000 it has approved more than 50 changes in broadcast ownership, worth more than $13 billion.
- Table 1 shows one outcome: in 2014 the five largest owners earned 82% of all radio and TV revenues.
- Table 2 shows that of the 57 communities with local private TV stations, 54 are served by one or more of the five largest TV broadcasters. Independent local TV stations operate in just 17.
- As ownership has consolidated, what has happened to local broadcast news? Tables 3, 4 and 5 show that as TV station ownership concentrated, expenditures on local programming and local TV news decreased, and staff were cut.

- 16 Moving to programming, Table 6 sets out the CRTC's definitions of TV news. Radio news is not defined.
- 17 The programming data that radio stations do send the CRTC every month are shown in Table 2 7. As they do not identify local news, the level of local news broadcast by radio stations is not known.
- 18 Table 8 summarizes a study the forum undertook of local radio news, using CRTC decisions. In the 1980s radio stations were broadcasting an average of 10.2 hours of news per week. In the 2000s new stations were proposing 4.2 hours/week, or 58% less.
- 19 Table 9 shows the data that TV stations send the CRTC every month about their programming.
- 20 Table 10 shows that some TV stations describe programs produced outside their communities, or by radio stations, as original local TV news. In our view, the TV log results about the level of local original news produced by TV stations are unreliable.
- 21 Table 11 compares TV stations' descriptions of their weekly local original news in 2000, with the CRTC's current requirements. The CRTC requires private TV stations to broadcast local programming, but does not specify hours of local news. It dropped that requirement in 1999.
- 22 On January 25th, the CRTC discussed redefining local news. Its redefinition raises concerns because as Table 12 shows, talk shows, historical documentaries and telethons would then count as news, diluting the concept.
- 23 Table 13 lists the data that the CRTC collects from broadcasters about their annual operations. As it does not ask how many journalists they employ, their capacity to gather news is unknown. And, in general, it asks little about broadcasters' Internet news presence or its resources.
- 24 In brief, Madam Chair, there are few facts about Canadians' access to original local broadcast news about their communities, or stations' capacity to gather this news.
- IV Conclusions and recommendations: good management needs relevant, reliable and valid data

Conclusions

- 25 So what ought to be done about local broadcast news?
- 26 The proposal now on the table is for another fund for local television.
- 27 The first was the Small Market Local Programming Fund, approved by the CRTC in 2003. Table 15 shows that since 2013, the five largest TV broadcasters have received or 16.8% of its funding.
- 28 The CRTC approved the LPIF ('el-pif') in 2009. Table 10 15 shows that the CBC and four largest TV broadcasters received 80% of its funding.
- Last month the CRTC was asked to establish a new Local News Fund. It would shift 29 millions of dollars from cable and satellite subscribers – that now support cable community channels – to private TV stations. The Fund's impact on local TV news is unclear; BCE said it would not broadcast more local news, even with this fund.

A Recommendations

- 30 It's clear that the problem of local broadcast news has no easy answer.
- 31 The invisible elephant in this room is that major gaps in data about local broadcast programming make it impossible to know if Parliament's objectives for local broadcasting are being met, or if consolidated ownership has strengthened or weakened local broadcast news. The CRTC's routine destruction of its older records means these gaps are growing.
- 32 The Forum's concern is that basing policies on assumptions, instead of facts, creates new risks. Policies may be seen as favouring some at the expense of others; they risk failure if they focus on the wrong problems.
- 33 We have three suggestions.
- 34 First, Parliament needs facts, not guesswork. The CRTC should consult with the public in the next year to revise its data collection and reporting systems. As the head of CTV once told the CRTC, you can't manage what you don't measure.
- 35 Second, if Parliament wants Canadians to have access to broadcast news, there must be enforceable and enforced levels of original local news.
- The CRTC dropped such conditions in the early 1990s. It said competition would work 36 just as well as regulation in ensuring Canadians' access to local broadcast content. In private TV, of course, the number of competitors has fallen from 30 to 17 since 1991. Nearly all non-news local TV programs are gone, along with 30% of TV stations' jobs. Centralcasting – where Toronto anchors present local news – is ubiquitous. Some TV stations broadcast radio, and radio stations such as CFRA in Ottawa, broadcast TV.
- 37 Yet while a CRTC survey found that 81% of Canadians said that local TV news is important, TV broadcasters say they cannot afford it, because they cannot monetize it.
- 38 On February 1st the Forum therefore asked the CRTC local TV panel to set conditions of licence for original local broadcast news. That regulatory approach was effective from the 1970s to 1990.
- 39 The panel's Chair dismissed this as pure nostalgia, however. A bit odd – since on January 12th the CRTC denied requests from ethnic organizations for a public hearing into last May's cancellation by Rogers of all local ethnic language TV news for communities in Vancouver, Calgary, Edmonton and Toronto – precisely because the CRTC had not set conditions for local news on those licences.
- 40 If Parliament wants local broadcast news, the CRTC should be required to set conditions of licence for expenditures on, and hours of, original local radio and TV news produced in, and predominantly about, the communities that stations are licensed to serve, when it renews radio and TV licences in the next one to two years.
- 41 Third, Parliament ought to know if its objectives for its communications system are being met.

- 42 The current statutes and the CRTC Act were written decades ago. They don't explain whether or how the CRTC should deal with the Internet and its ramifications, or require the CRTC to serve the public interest.
- 43 Implementing the first recommendation, for better data, will position this Committee for the next several years, if it were to study whether Canada's communications legislation should be updated for the 21st century.
- 44 Madam Chair, local radio and TV stations obviously help you and your colleagues to stay informed about events in the communities you represent, and to stay in touch with your constituents. Strong local media are vital.
- 45 Some say we shouldn't worry about the changes happening in the media, that the Internet provides multiple sources of information. But these sources are for the most part aggregators that compile material produced by professional print and broadcast journalists.
- 46 The goal for your Committee, and for the CRTC, should be to ensure that in an era of constant upheaval we do not lose a vital component of Canadians' lives - the local news which, as Walter Robinson of the Boston Globe's Spotlight unit so eloquently put it, gives people the ability to make thoughtful decisions in a democratic society.

Thank you for your time.
